Maybe you've experienced a few of the challenging aspects we all learn to live with as hands-on professionals, including: Art fatigue Migraines Lack of focus and workflow Boredom A bad energy The need to cleanse yourself after recording One of our goals is to help you learn to love music-making again, as we were when we were kids. You might have experienced creative block and found yourself having to "force" yourself to write songs. We would encourage you to teach yourself how to embrace it: listen, repeat, rearrange. It's like pushing a negative energy out of you; it can be nice and refreshing to be in that kind of mindset. It's normal, you just have to embrace it and keep pushing forward! We're going to be revealing some of our secret techniques for 2017. Below, we've listed some of the secret tecwniques we'll be using to combat artists' dreaded worst-case scenario: "Yeah, I've got nothing." Hold onto your hats, we're about to dive into some awesome stuff. Let's face it: if you've never recorded with us in the past, you're in the company of very highly regarded, talented musicians! We're here to help you grow and maybe even to save you from yourself! It can be quite daunting at times, and sometimes you'll feel like it's too much to handle, like a band from the era when we didn't have gear and had to make some crazy, impromptu choices. You'll wonder what we were thinking, but we're happy to tell you that if things get rough, it's because we know that learning is essential! We feel a real responsibility to show you that with every step you take. Don't worry, we're not going to tell you every little thing, but we'll have a few secrets for you along the way that will help you combat your own personal "Oh man, I'm starting to lose it" night! Secret #1: Concentrate on what you're trying to achieve, not your writing. This may seem a little scary at first, as you're trying to put yourself out there and lay down your creative creation on the table. But if you've been there, you're aware of what we're talking about: it

Although great strides have been made to improve the health of the American public, disparities in health exist regionally. This report describes aggregate equity of health conditions across nine Southeastern (SE) states at a time when health disparity issues have been discussed at greater depth than ever before. SE states, with substantial disparities among populations, are often dismissed as undesirable foci of public health. Yet, the contrast between the relatively healthier and the sicker states across the region creates a case for considering the impact of public health interventions on equity, especially when there is broad agreement among society about the fairness of certain outcomes. The disparity of cancer death rates between North Carolina, the wealthiest, and Tennessee, the poorest state in the nation is a case in point. While the disparity is encouraging in its early signs of change, further work is needed to understand the mechanisms that may be at work to explain disparate cancer outcomes between economically diverse regions.

Jane Levy Has a New Show in the Works and Her Glee Star Co-Star Will Return Glee Cast Watch: Which Stars Will Make an Expected Comeback? Jane Levy's character on Fox's Glee has been rumored for months, and it was confirmed last night at the start of the Super Bowl. But in the midst of all the sports-related excitement, Glee star Naya Rivera showed up unexpectedly to the Fox pre-Super Bowl party. Rivera, who plays Santana, was there to be part of the Fox broadcast. But she also revealed that she's been meeting with Jane Levy and the team is planning to announce the "Glee" actress' own show on the network starting next season. Jane Levy — who was the pilot for Jane the Virgin — will play the grown-up version of the girl who played Jenna Dewan Tatum's doppelganger on Glee. The actress spent some of her downtime last year doing some songs and presenting awards at the Screen Act f678ea9f9e
